Learn more about GMO labeling initiative 1-522

The 2013 Justice Begins with Seeds Conference is being held in Seattle, Wash this year. It's a fitting location, as Washington State is at the center of the country's next key GMO labeling battle. Anti-GMO activists are working feverishly throughout the entire state to pass I-522, Washington's GMO labeling initiative, on Nov. 5.

This annual conference is the largest gathering in the U.S. focused on educating and creating awareness about the implications of GMO seeds. It's an international platform from which to share, learn and launch campaigns in support of a GMO-free food supply.

Attendees will hear from more than 60 speakers, including farmers, activists, business owners, scientists and faith leaders, who will examine the impact of GMO seeds on health, social justice and environment and corporate consolidation, in local to global contexts.

To learn more and register for the conference please visit: <http://biosafetyalliance.org/>

This of course is just one avenue to find out more information. Become an INFORMED voter. This is an important decision we are able to participate in this year. Whatever your position, get out and VOTE in November!
